

Signature: North-West-Center

Feminine/Masculine Balance: 1/4

Feminine numbers are overall tougher, more tenacious, and enduring but they lack the masculine energy of spontaneity. Masculine numbers have an immediate and noticeable effect, but their impact doesn't last long.

Most of the numbers in your birthdate are masculine, which means that you have an easier time than others making decisions quickly. You're decisive but you may also have the tendency to be impatient and reckless in everyday situations.

Cardinal Points

The North represents the end of the old and the beginning of the new.

Because of your numbers in the West and your incredible self-discipline, you would be successful in research-based roles.

The number one resonates strongly with the energies of knowledge and communication. People under the influence of this number are often unsatisfied with knowing just the basics; the exploration of truth in its entirety is what drives their ambition. When the numbers of the North appear in repetition, as they do in your case, these numbers' energies are unusually strong and their influence can result in manic depression, where you are high on life one day and extremely low the next. The remedy: learning to practice patience as an antidote to your impatience with the drudgery of life.

The East reflects the energies of enthusiasm and joy that take root in the developmental stages of new ideas.

The South resonates the liveliness needed to present ideas to others. People with the South represented in their Personal Codes share the qualities of charisma, curiosity and expressiveness.

The West embodies the organizational qualities needed to turn a dream into a reality. Western energies are powered by tremendous strength; your willpower and purposefulness are unchallenged by the other Cardinal points. With the West represented in your Personal Code, you're usually fine with being the hardest working workhorse in the field as long as your vision is clear and you believe that success is on your path. With that, you're often open to constructive criticism—the kind that exposes you to meaningful changes that benefit your progress.

A born leader? Yes, you are. However, patience is not exactly one of your many virtues. You have the perseverance and business drive to take projects from ideas to working pieces and your financial prowess make successful money management second nature to you. There are many geniuses and renown inventors with the influence of the West in their Personal Codes, but since their work is often ahead of its time, many of them are only acknowledged for their contributions after they've crossed over.

You're hurt if you feel that you're not being taken seriously, whether that means others not believing in your new idea, not appreciating how important your goals are to you, or not understanding why you haven't given up yet.

If you want to promote the energies of the West, fill your home environment, your office and your closet with the color white. Of particular importance is limiting the amount of green you wear if you want to further cultivate the qualities of the West, since green effectively blocks the energies of the West.

The energies of the four are often found among groups of skilled workers, engineers and self-made successes. You're very talented with your hands, producing beautiful things with them that make others feel they have two left hands. This could manifest in many ways, from having the innate talent to decorate a home with beauty and grace to building beautiful homes from the ground up.

The gift of the Center is that of stability. Emotional ups and downs are not part of your experience. You feel compelled to help, to nurture, and to give generously from a place of groundedness and calm. On the surface, there is a contradiction about this energy: you often experience strong homesickness, while at the same time fully knowing that you aren't tied to any one place in this world; you feel pulled to travel or even move to new locations more often than those without the West in their Personal Code. People of the Center tend to gravitate toward philanthropic organizations or want to work in areas that help them give back to their communities in some other way, particularly if the community is worldwide.

One of the pitfalls of the people of the Center is being happy with helping others or being there for them without paying attention to whether it's actually helping the situation. In other words, you will justify to yourself that the good feeling you get from helping out means that you're doing a good thing, regardless of whether your intentions are beneficial, genuine, or unconditional. In this way, you may run the risk of robbing others of their right to independence and freedom to learn on their own, thus creating material or emotional dependence on you.

The energies of the five bestow upon the people of the Center a deep connection to the earth. Gardeners and farmers often have a five in their Personal Codes.

The energies of the zero are similar to those of the five, but in addition, it integrates a little of all the other Numbers and Cardinal Points and leans more toward the spiritual than the natural senses.

Extremes of the Center...

Extremes of the Center manifest in various ways. An emphasis on moderation in daily life could lead to lethargy and could be a symptom of anxiety or of a lack of direction in life. Being a constant worrier or allowing others to continuously take advantage of you are other manifestations of this extreme. Wastefulness, absentmindedness, or dissatisfaction/impatience with yourself are other signs of an overactive Center. In these cases, avoid surrounding yourself with the color yellow (especially for your bed linens, walls, and carpets), which could throw you into a dream state where you're easily distracted and feel uncertain about your direction.

Missing Stations

East: You tend to shy away from commotion if you lack the number three in your birth date. Without the number eight, you tend to overcomplicate things. With either an overbalance or a lack of a representation of the numbers of the East, you have a tendency not to consider the consequences of the things you say (a lack of empathy).

Aside from surrounding yourself with more of the color green to offset the void, you can also make conscious steps toward developing the gifts that these numbers impart. For example, practice improving your communication skills by listening more carefully in conversations to try to connect with the message between the words of the person speaking; focus on listening to the true message being transmitted rather than just the surface words being said. Another wonderful way to begin balancing your East is to surround yourself with people who have this influence in their Codes. The odd thing is that you'll often try very hard to avoid these people because you see them as too emotional; being around them is unpleasant for you because you'd much prefer pretending your emotions didn't exist.

South: People who don't have the numbers of the South represented in their Personal Codes may be difficult to listen to, particularly if they're speaking publicly in front of an audience. As a result, they tend to feel misunderstood, unappreciated or simply left out of life. Even if, on the outside, you lead a successful life, you'll still carry the fear of not being valued enough by those around you. Surrounding yourself with the color red will draw more energy to you, helping you manifest your ideas more easily and follow through on projects that you'd normally abandon before completion. You may already gravitate toward lively music when you're in need of the Southern influence, but if you haven't tried it yet, listen to energetic tunes when you feel down instead of opting for meditative tracks.
